cleared, after the command, he was lying on his face. The surgeon (his friend) pronounced him dead and he was carried to his wife; she had woman's apparel to dress him, and thus disguised he was taken to Paris, where a fine horse was ready, and before the sun arose he was eighty miles on his journey to Bordeaux, where he took passage on an American vessel for Charleston. What follows is consistent, but strange and sad.

"He was twice recognized by his own men, once in Charleston in 1840 and once earlier on shipboard. He lived in the hope of going back to France, and anxiously watched her movements. He thought that young Napoleon would come into power. News was expected from Charleston on Saturday. Friday night be told his pupils he might not be there Monday, but word came that Louis Philippe was on the throne. Despair seized him, he was almost deranged. My father had to stay in the room with him all night to keep him from destroying himself."

by Marshal Ney?" I asked a man of seven-'If it was not he, who was it? He might have been anybody. He was a splendid-looking man; he had a fine eye; he was bald, had a saber-cut across his forehead. and was old. yet he was handsome. He stood erect; his voice had command in it, and you felt that he could be heard a long distance without shouting. He was always well dressed; he wore a surtout of good cloth that reached below the knee. When he walked he always had his hands behind him under the skirt of his coat. He was very fond of fencing, using long hickory sticks. I have seen him back the boys out of the yard many a time. One Fourth of July he was orator of the day. All the militia was out, and he handled the troops, He did it splendidly. There was never anything like it before. He seemed in his proper element."

What was his method of teaching?" "Well, he was rough and lammed them around some. The good scholars he pushed When Tom Young had been head of the Latin class a week Mr. Ney told him if he would stand there another week he would give him a five-dollar bill. One day he had the grammar class parsing and was walking up and down with one hand under the skirt of his coat and a book in the other. When Bill Baily got mixed up on gender, 'By the powers!' said Mr. Ney, 'what gender is that shovel?' 'Feminine,' said Bailey. 'By the powers!' again, and he slammed the book down and seized the shovel as if it were a Cossack." So sure are the people of that generation that this exile was the Marshal Ney that they are going to place a monument at his grave in Third Creek church-yard. In 1874 Mrs. Dalton was visting her brother in Houstonia, Mo. He showed her a newspaper cutting, saying that an old soldier in the federal navy said that Marshal Ney was not shot, but came on the same ship with him from Bordeaux to Charleston; that one day he saw the marshal walking on deck with his hands behing him, and, going up to him, he said: "] think I know who you are.' "Whom do you think I am?" "You are Marshal Ney."

The reply was, "Marshal Ney was shot two weeks ago," and he went below and did not come one deck again during the At Mrs. Dalton's request her brother published what he knew about the man and gave as proof Lucius Butler, of Iredell; Dr. John N. Young, of Watervalley, Miss., and M. C. H. Dalton, of Houstonville, N. C. After Marshal Nev's death Pliny Miles, representing himself as one of the Historical Society of New York, took the auto-biography of Peter Ney for the purpose, he said, of translating it. Instead of doing so he took it to France and has never re-

I also want my boys to learn to love the farm. So I got them to put into crop a small piece of ground, and agreed to pay them a high price for their vegetables. Being a busy man I have not paid much attention to the process of their farming, but I have bought from them $85 worth of truck which I could have gotten of the neighbors for $31.50, and which my young agricultur- | ton, O. ists. I am told, did buy at even less than

PERSONAL AND SOCIETY.

[All society and personal notes for the Sunday issue of the Journal, to secure publication, must be in the hands of the city editor by Saturday

If Madame Rumor is at all correct in her assertions, this will be a season of weddings such as society has not enjoyed for several years. The aunouncement of an engagement is considered a choice bit of news, and as such spreads like wildfire. It is discussed pro and con in every phase, and all the deeds, good and bad, of "omission and commission," as the preacher puts it, are sweet morsels of talk. A young man or young woman who is known to have gone through the experience of courtship, and yielded to that sweet influence called love, becomes interesting to the public in general. Just now engagements are the leading topics of society conversation, and each day a new one is whispered. The private announcements are made "Have you heard that A and B are engaged?" No. 2 says to the next one that A and B are engaged, announces it as a fact, and after that it is told as a statement rather than a surmise or hear-say. This wholesale connection of names without authority is very embarrassing to those directly interested. The names of couples in this city have been thus connected by persons who knew them, yet such couples had not the slightest intention of becoming engaged. When the rumor reached their ears, however, they became additionally interested in each other, and finally married. So, possibly, fate through gossip linked their lives. People will talk of others, and probably engagement gossip is as harmless as anything. Certainly society has never been quite so fully gratified as with the plentitude of engagements now on the tapis.

The white-and-gold craze has been growing daily for the past few months, and now may be said to be at its height. No modern house is quite complete unless one room, at least, is in white and gold, with a bit of color to heighten the effect. When a drawing-room is done in white and gold. and the furniture and ornamentation correspond, it is an apartment of purity and beauty. The first of the era of this combination confined it to the drawing-room. By degrees it has apread to other rooms. One of the last houses finished in town is finished in white throughout, and there is an atmosphere of cleanliness and freshness about the whole was is exceedingly refreshing. There .s a fad slowly but suregrowing, especially among young housekeepers, to have one chamber finished in white. Certainly repose is more health-renewing in a room that is daintily finished in white than in one heavy with hangings and somber furniture. After occupying a room all white there is a dreariness in an apartment less light. So much is this idea growing that dark furniture is being put into a new dress of white paint. Old furniture which has been discarded and rested in the garret for years is being brought out and treated to several coats of paint and topped with an enamel that makes it shine. There are more than a dozen young housekeepers in the city who are preparing for a grand transformation scene, and are busily engaged in painting enough furniture to completely refurnish a room. There is a fascination in the work which enthuses until the last bit is done, and a complacency and pride that makes the worker fully compensated for all the
